Source Counties in Southeastern Pennsylvania of Migrants to Waterloo Township, 1800-1829

INTRODUCTION

Descendants of pioneer families may disagree on which of their ancestors was first to settle in Waterloo Township. The first date may be of early reconnaissance, or land purchase, or actual occupation and use of the land. A reconstruction of the arrivals of settlers between 1800 and 1830 can help us to understand the processes of migration and settlement and the foundations of the local society and economy.¹ Information about more than 150 founding families is presented in the tables of this report -- including names of family head and spouse, dates of birth and death of each, places of origin (mainly Pennsylvania counties), dates of migration, numbers of children, and stage of the family life cycle, and township lots on which the pioneers settled.²

Where did most settlers come from and how was that significant? Almost all before 1830 came from southeastern Pennsylvania, four in ten founding families migrating from Lancaster County and nearly three in ten from Montgomery County. Eight or nine founding families each came from Berks, Bucks and Chester counties, and one to four families each from Cumberland, Franklin, Northumberland, York and Philadelphia.³ Most founding families were Mennonites, with some River Brethren (also known as Tunkers or Dunkards, and later as Brethren in Christ). A few families belonged to other nonconformist or pacifist sects and had lived only a few years in Pennsylvania before moving to Upper Canada.

Why did the first settlers move to the margins of settlement at this time? The first migrants from Pennsylvania who pioneered Waterloo Township were following in the tracks of earlier migrants who crossed the Niagara River into British North America from the mid-1780s. Members of pacifist sects who were descended from the Palatine Germans who had migrated to Pennsylvania in the first half of the 18th century, they are usually distinguished from the United Empire Loyalists of English origin who left the American colonies between 1783 and 1786 and received generous land grants in Canada. In the 1790s, Pennsylvania Mennonites responded to the immigration and settlement efforts of the Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada which were publicized in American newspapers and through British Consuls in United States cities such as Philadelphia. John Graves Simcoe issued a proclamation inviting settlers from the United States, and also provided in the Militia Act of 1793 for procedures through which "Quakers, Mennonists or Tunkers" might be exempted from military service. Agents for Lancaster County Mennonites tried to negotiate a large land grant for a major settlement in 1795 through Phineas Bond, the British Consul in Philadelphia but their request for six contiguous townships must have been regarded as too much.⁴

Before 1800, the Mennonites and River Brethren from Pennsylvania settled in the Niagara Peninsula and adjacent parts of what became Haldimand County, notably in the townships later named Bertie, Pelham, Humberstone, Willoughby, Walsingham and Rainham. These settlers had to buy their lands, often from a British soldier or United Empire Loyalist who had been given a land grant by the British government. By the late 1790s, most land around the shores of the Great Lakes had been claimed and new settlers had to look farther inland. News of the availability of land in Beasley's Block 2 of the Six Nations Tract coincided with the realization by various Pennsylvania Mennonites that they should migrate to find more land for their expanding families.

How typical were processes of migration and settlement in Beasley's Township of what was happening more generally in Upper Canada or on the larger settlement frontier? Waterloo Township is a good example of chain migration, with several features that would persist until the later 19th century. One was the practice of young men coming first as scouts, to reconnoitre conditions in the middle Grand Valley, before larger family parties moved in their wagons with all their stock and effects. Another was the migration of the whole extended family group (or freundschaft) together, with adult children and grandchildren as well as elderly couples. The average age of male household heads moving to settle in Waterloo Township between 1800 and 1829 was 34 and the mean age of their spouses was just under 29 years at the time they migrated. Three in five of the pioneer families consisted of married couples aged between 30 and 55 with several children (from youngsters up to young adults). One in three pioneers was a single male and one in six a young couple in their twenties. But the pioneers ranged from patriarchs such as John Biehn Sr, Samuel Betzner Sr and Abraham Bechtel who were all more than 60 years old when they migrated in 1800, to young single men of 17 to 20 who accompanied family parties.

Most Pennsylvania families who moved into Beasley's Township were already interrelated by kinship and marriage. Before they migrated, they learned about Upper Canada from cousins, in-laws and former neighbours who had already moved to the Niagara Peninsula area.⁵ In turn, those who settled in the township wrote letters to and revisited their relations in Pennsylvania, informing them of the possibilities and conditions in the Grand River settlement, so that people continued to migrate to Upper Canada until the 1860s. Chain migration processes also drew sons and daughters of Waterloo Township families to settle in townships farther north and west in Upper Canada and, later, to move to the United States Midwest and the Canadian West.

In what stages did migration from Pennsylvania and first settlement in Waterloo Township occur? There were four main phases of movement of Mennonites and related groups from Pennsylvania to Beasley's Township between 1800 and 1830. The first, from 1800 to 1804, was clouded by the uncertainties of land title. The second was boosted by the purchase in 1805 of about two-thirds of the township by an association of Lancaster County families but interrupted by the outbreak of war between the British and Americans in 1812. With the end of that war in 1814 and of the Napoleonic Wars in 1815, migration resumed in a third phase of settlement from 1815 to 1820. A fourth phase, between 1822 and 1829, was associated with a severe agricultural depression in Lancaster County. By 1830, much of Waterloo Township had been taken up, even if held by absentee owners. New settlers in search of land tended to move on to newer townships such as Woolwich to the north, Wilmot to the west or to the Canada Company's Huron Tract. New arrivals who settled in Waterloo Township after 1830 either laboured for the existing farmers or were craftsmen or tradesmen in the small villages.

1: Arrivals 1800-1804

The first phase of immigration into Beasley's Township involved 31 families or single men who later headed households. Of these, 17 were couples with families, six were newly married couples, while three elderly couples arrived as part of three-generation extended families with grandchildren, and five were bachelors who soon married daughters of other families. These first settlers came from several Pennsylvania counties, with most (and the earliest) from Montgomery County, but almost as many from Franklin, Lancaster, Cumberland and York counties. However, some pioneers had been born in Europe and migrated to Pennsylvania as children or youths; others moved to Pennsylvania from neighbouring states or from one county to another around southeastern Pennsylvania before migrating to Upper Canada. By early 1805, most pioneers clustered around the forks of the Grand River and its eastern branch (later named the Speed) in the south-central part of the township.

The first Pennsylvania Mennonites to show interest in Beasley's Township were from Montgomery and Franklin Counties. Which was actually first depends on whether we count the first scout, the first pioneer to buy land from Beasley, or the first to settle as a family and begin cultivation. Most written accounts of Waterloo Township credit Joseph Schörg and Samuel D. Betzner with being first,⁵ so the Pioneers' Memorial Tower was located in 1924 on their land opposite Doon. However, other family traditions and land records have challenged the accuracy of this claim. The Bechtels and Biehns were first to register title to their land and probably, by a few weeks, actually to begin settling on it.

2: Arrivals 1805-1812

People from Lancaster County predominated among the 46 pioneer households or individuals who came to Block 2 between 1805 and 1812. Interrelated members of the Erb, Eby, Wissler, Weber and Bricker families were the leading stockholders in the Lancaster-based German Company whose purchase of two-thirds of Block 2 effectively settled the problems of Richard Beasley's mortgage and the pioneers' insecure land titles. But settlers also arrived from other counties in southeastern Pennsylvania -- particularly from Montgomery County, but also from Chester, Berks and Dauphin. Of the 46 pioneers between 1805 and 1812, 16 were mature couples with families, eight were young couples, and there were 18 bachelors (who married daughters of other families). This phase of settlement, critical in shaping the development and culture of Waterloo Township for the next half-century, is more fully described in Waterloo Township through two centuries, with only one sample family sketched here.

Henry Weber, of Earl Township in Lancaster County and married to a Hershey, subscribed for eight shares in the German Company. Though he did not migrate to Canada, four of his seven sons settled in or close to Waterloo Township. Abraham arrived in 1807 with the Benjamin Eby party and took up GCT16, one of the lots his father had drawn.⁷ Other Webers came later, after the end of the wars, to take up some of their father's lots. Henry H. came in 1816 in the party with Joseph Clemmer, Dilman Ziegler, Samuel Eby and John Brubacher, and located on GCT65, one of Jacob Wissler's lots. Benjamin and his wife Veronica Martin migrated in 1817 and settled on GCT8, one of Daniel Erb's lots. Daniel and his wife Anna Martin arrived in Waterloo in 1819, in a party that included the Peter Martin family; they eventually settled just across the Woolwich townline from Henry Weber's farm.

3. Arrivals 1815-1820

Settlement in Block 2 (renamed Waterloo Township in 1816) continued to be affected by fluctuations in the flow of migrants, reflecting trends in the world, national and regional economies and the state of war or peace in Europe or North America. Until 1815, the Napoleonic wars generally prevented potential migrants from leaving Europe and the flow of migrants from Pennsylvania was interrupted during the American-British war of 1812-1814. After 1815, migrants again crossed the Atlantic from various parts of Europe, driven by famine or persecution and drawn by the prospect of cheap land and individual freedom. The state of the Pennsylvania rural economy was a factor from about 1815 to the late 1820s, both making Mennonites there more interested in moving elsewhere but also preventing some from doing so by the impossibility of selling their farms. Between 1815 and 1818, families already established in the township were joined by cousins and other relations moving from Pennsylvania.

In the first five years of peace, 25 new pioneer families settled in Waterloo Township. Nine were couples with families, two newly married couples, one had a completed family, and 11 were bachelors (who married daughters of other families). More than half the pioneers in this period came from Lancaster County and were usually related by kin or marriage to earlier arrivals. Smaller numbers came from other counties east of Lancaster and from Philadelphia. However, travelling parties from southeastern Pennsylvania bound for Waterloo Township usually comprised settlers from several counties, interlinked by kinship or marriage ties or associated for convenience and safety on the journey. Settlers in this period, more often than their forerunners, had to work as tenants for some time before buying farms of their own. They or their children tended to move on to other neighbouring townships such as Woolwich or Wilmot where land was cheaper or more plentiful. In some cases, their descendants may have returned later in the mid-19th century to Waterloo Township or its villages and towns.

Land Development by 1831

-  Lots at least partly cultivated and settled
-  Lots not reported in 1831 assessment rolls
-  Lots reported with no cultivation, 1831
-  Lots probably uncultivated, 1831

4. Arrivals 1822-1829

Between 1822 and 1829, 50 pioneer families or individuals settled in the township. They included 22 couples with families, eight newly married couples, 17 bachelors and two widows. The largest number (23) of the new pioneers in this period were from Montgomery County, with 15 from Lancaster County. Information for 14 notable pioneers who arrived between 1830 and 1842, and were either Mennonite or later intermarried with Mennonite families, is appended to the tables that follow this introduction.

From the later 1820s, migrants of other religious backgrounds and from other source areas began to people the township. Pioneer settlers of more varied stock were associated with the opening of land in adjoining townships. William Dickson's Dumfries settlement brought Scots along the township's southern boundary, while John Galt's Canada Company brought English, Irish and Scots both to the east in the settlement of Guelph Township and to the west in the Huron Tract. Wilmot Township was opened for Amish settlement and also to the Canada Company in its southern concessions. Within Waterloo Township, there were pockets of German settlers of different backgrounds, such as Lutherans in the embryonic villages of Preston and Berlin and Catholics from Alsace in the northeastern corner around the later small hamlets of Freiburg and New Germany. The township's population rose to 2,791 by 1835 (including 2,000 Mennonites). From the 1830s, settlers of more varied ethnic, cultural and religious stock filled up the township and promoted the growth of service centres. European Germans, often skilled craftsmen and tradesmen but also labourers, account for much of the population growth from 2,791 in 1835 to 4,424 in 1846, and 8,878 by 1851.

Most of the 150 pioneers who came from Pennsylvania by 1829 founded families that continued in the township for many decades. Almost all were counted in the 1831 census and assessment rolls, allowing us to compare those who arrived in various periods and from different source areas. We find that male heads of household and their spouses lived at least the biblical life span of 70 years on the average, those in the first period tending to live longest. The mean number of children in each pioneer family was a little over eight.

Pioneers from Pennsylvania (with their sons and daughters) accounted for just 70 per cent of Waterloo Township's population in 1831. They owned over 87 per cent of the township land assessed in that year -- 50,378 acres compared with only 7,260 acres owned by other settlers -- and a similar proportion of the cultivated area (11,919 acres, compared with only 1,698 acres). Settlers from Lancaster County, especially those who came between 1805 and 1812, owned larger acreages (total and cultivated) than settlers from other Pennsylvania counties. The average landholding of a Lancaster County pioneer in 1831 was 355 acres (with 80 acres cultivated) while the average pioneer from Montgomery County had 183 acres (52.5 acres cultivated). Because of their larger reserves of land, the Lancaster County group cultivated only 20 per cent of their land in 1831, compared with over 26 per cent for Montgomery County pioneers, and 31 per cent for other Pennsylvania pioneers.⁸

A generation later, in 1861, descendants of the Mennonite pioneers still had a substantial advantage over latecomers. Landowners whose ancestors migrated from Pennsylvania held an average 136 acres (those from Lancaster County with a mean of 148 acres), compared with only 103 acres for those whose ancestors came from Scotland or Ireland, 85 for those from England, and only 64 for those from the German states and Alsace. In the second half of the nineteenth century, large numbers of members of pioneer families moved on to other settlement frontiers, in the western United States and western Canada.

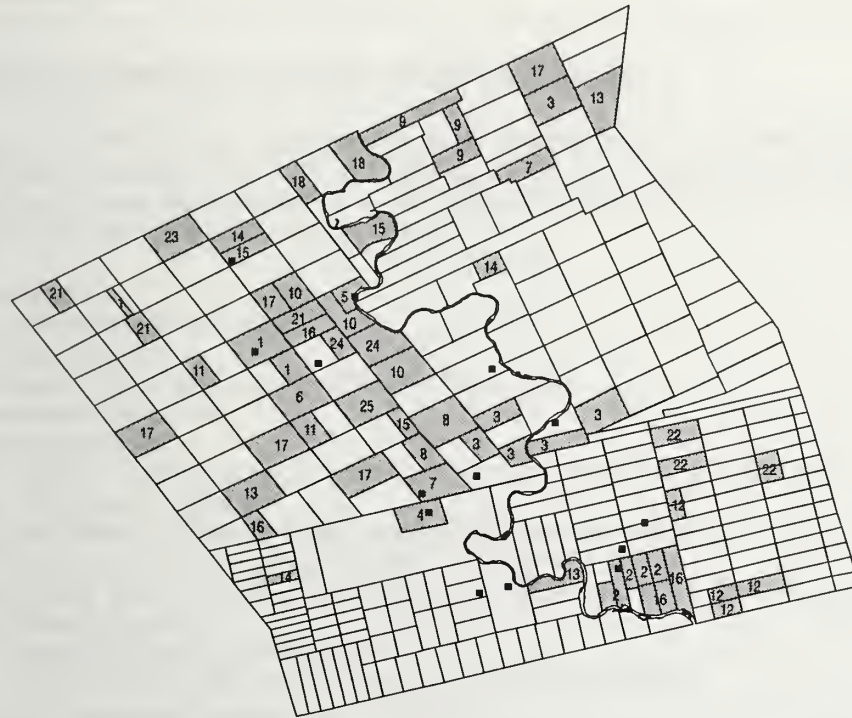

From the early twentieth century, various Mennonite founding families have organized centennial family reunions. Hundreds of descendants have gathered for each event, their surnames reflecting the intermarriage among pioneer families and their current addresses the extent of continued migration during the nineteenth century. Surnames of Sherk (formerly Schörg) descendants at the 1900 reunion included Betzner, Shantz, Snyder, Brubacher, Bingeman, Musselman, Detweiler, Kolb, Weber, Martin, Quickfall, Bean (formerly Biehn), Eby, Stauffer, Cressman, Brech, Clemens, Hilborn, Thoman, Hagey, Moyer, Honsberger, Horst, Witmer, Gingrich, Kinzie, Oberholtzer, McNally, Shupe and Shoemaker. As well as those living in Ontario, descendants visited from Brown City, Kent County in Michigan; Topeka, South Bend and Elkhart in Indiana; Freeport, Illinois; Buffalo, NY; Dubuque, Iowa; and Biglerville, Pennsylvania.⁹ Among the many reunions staged between 1900 and 1939 were those of the Betzner, Brubacher, Cressman, Gingrich, Hagey, Hallman, Schiedel, Schneider, Shantz, Stauffer, Weber and Witmer families.¹⁰

Burkholder, "The early Mennonite settlements in Ontario," Mennonite Quarterly Review 8,3 (1934), pp.116-120. Burkholder's list differs from the data in the PIONEER database in including some families who settled first in Wilmot or Woolwich Townships rather than Waterloo, and in omitting some names (including, perhaps, families not considered to have been Mennonite). Burkholder identified 100 family names, of which the following were from Lancaster County: Bauman, Block, Bock, Bricker, Brubacher, Burkhardt, Burkholder, Christner, Eby, Erb, Eschleman, Gingerich, Good, Groff, Hamacher, Heckdon, Hoffman, Horst, Huber, Keller, Kauffman, Martin, Meyer, Mosser, Reichert, Reist, Rudy, Schneider, Stauffer, Stoeckle, Strome, Unger, Wanner, Weber, Winger (Wenger), Witmer, Yost. From Montgomery were: Bechtel, Biehn, Bingeman, Blihm, Cassel, Clemmer, Detweiler, Gehman, Grody, Hagey, Hallman, Histan, Hunsberger, Oberholtzer, Pannebacker, Rosenberger, Schiedel, Swartz, Shantz, Shoemaker, Souder, Thoman, Wismer, Ziegler, Lichty. From Bucks County: Fried, Kolb, Haas, Kinzie and Wideman. The Koch, Musselman, Nahrang and Schmidt families came from Germany, and the Brech (Break) family from Dauphin County, Clemens from Chester, Cressman from Limerick Township, Bowers from Northumberland. The Betzner, Schoerg (Sherk), and Schlichter families came from Franklin; Bear from York; and Bauman (Bowman) and Latschaw (Latschar) from Berks.

WATERLOO TOWNSHIP FOUNDING FAMILIES, 1800-1830

Sources: PIONEER database of information about founding families, compiled for Waterloo Township history project. Criteria for inclusion in were: migration to Waterloo Township before 1830 and residence there for at least 10 years by family head or immediate successors. Information based on Ezra Eby's Biographical history, supplemented by a wide range of family histories, also by details in 1831 assessment rolls of Gore District. Cecil Gingrich, Eldon Weber and Reg Good are thanked for their advice.

Notes: According to letters held by Madeline Lavender of Burlington (1995), brothers-in-law William and John Martinson left Thealby, Lincolnshire, England in spring 1830 for Quebec, and were some years in Jamesville, Onondaga County, NY through the early 1830s. Another source village may be Burton and there are still Quickfalls in the Scunthorpe area. Thomas Quickfall and wife Hannah Martinson crossed in 1831 and presumably were in or near Jamesville as well. There is some family connection with Malahide Township and the Otterville/Norwich area by the 1850s. In 1871 John Martinson (aged 63, Primitive Methodist, born in England) and sons Henry (34) and William (32) born in US, were all recorded in Wellesley Tp (manuscript census).

* Martinson & Quickfall are recorded in Waterloo Township by 1838 when they were assessed for 119 acres uncleared and 90 acres cleared in GCT lot3 (northeast of the tiny hamlet of Berlin).

* In 1839 and 1840, Martinson & Quickfall were assessed for 125 acres uncleared and 125 acres cleared in GCT lot 6 (east of the tiny hamlet of Waterloo). In 1840 they are said to have one 2-storey house of frame, brick or stone, 4 horses and 4 milch cows.

Samuel Moxley had this farm at least as early as 1831 and until 1838 (in 1831 Moxley was assessed with 258 acres, a one-storey log house and a 2 storey stone house). Farm was known as Old Moxley Farm and improved by Quickfalls to be renamed Evergreen Farm.

* By tradition, Thomas's aged parents, Franklin and Barbara Quickfall, came to GCT6 as well. In 1871, three Quickfall households enumerated in Waterloo County: Hannah widow (66) and sons Richard (38, on GCT6) and Thomas (36, in Woolwich Township).

* Richard (whose wife was Leah Groff) moved to adjoining farm on GCT60 (formerly Brubacher land) on his son Allen's marriage to a Brubacher c1889.

* Evergreen Farm (on GCT lot 6) ranked among the top hundred properties of Waterloo Township in 1861 (62nd), 1881 (37th), 1901 (65th) and 1921 (53rd). The 2-storey frame farmhouse was burned down c1934 and not replaced, the Arthur Quickfall family moving to the cottage. In mid-1960 the farm was bought for subdivison and the road through the property became Lincoln Road. The site of the homestead is marked by the Zehrs supermarket on Harvard Place.

WATERLOO TOWNSHIP PROPERTY-HOLDERS Evidence from the Gore District Assessment Rolls, 1831

The following table summarizes data for persons assessed in Waterloo Township in 1831, when it was part of the Gore District. All property-holders were subject to assessment and taxation under an 1815 act which required assessors to compile annual lists of all the "ratable property, real and personal." Before 1850, the assessor would usually ask his neighbours on town meeting day, in what kind of house each lived, how many stoves and fireplaces there were, and how much arable and meadow land, how many cattle, horses, sheep and pigs each owned. The assessor did not actually value the various possessions, as values were set by provincial statute.

When they survive, assessment rolls provide invaluable records of the social structure, land use and production of communities and regions. For those interested in family history and genealogy, they can provide evidence that named individuals and families were in particular places at specific dates.

In the table, the column headings may be decoded as follows:

name	name of assessed property-holder
mdate	date of arrival in Waterloo Township (known for founding families)
lots	surveyed lots abbreviated as follows:
	BBF Beasley's Broken Front
	BLB Beasley's Lower Block
	BNS Beasley's New Survey
